CONGRESS IGNORES PARTY HEADS; PASSES RESTRICTED HEALTH BILL

In its post-conventions meeting, the Congress turned thumbs down on bills backed by the two presidential candidates, and passed legislation in the health aid-to-the-aged field which fell far short of the wishes of either Vice-President Richard M. Nixon or Senator John F. Kennedy. The bill that finally passed provides federal participation in state grants to two classes of persons, those already receiving old age assistance and those "medically needy" persons who cannot afford the cost of proper health care. Both classes will have to submit to a "means test" and the individual states have wide latitude in deciding who shall be eligible. The estimated cost of the bill to the federal government would be about $200 million in its first year of operation if all states participate. About 1.5 million persons will be affected. There are an estimated 16 million Americans in the over-65 age bracket.

In accepting the bill it did, the Senate first voted down a bill offered by Sen. Jacob Javits (R-N.Y.) and backed by Vice-President Nixon and then, by a margin of 51-44, rejected a bill offered by Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D-N.M.) and vigorously urged by Sen. Kennedy. The Anderson Bill, which utilized the Social Security approach, would impose a one-quarter of one per cent tax upon employers and employees. From funds thus provided, medical care would have been made to those over 68 who are eligible for Old Age and Survivors Insurance benefits. About 12 million would have been covered. The Javits program, on theother hand, did not adopt the Social Security framework. Rather, it was along the lines of the Eisenhower Administration "medicare" voluntary insurance bill, though much more liberal in benefits. It would have covered all persons over the age of 65 except individuals with incomes over $3.000 and couples with incomes over $4,500. With an estimated coverage of 11 million, the costs would have been shared by the federal A number of and state governments. adherents of the defeated bills, including Senators Javits and Kennedy, were vocal in their dissatisfaction and said that when the new Congress convened in January, another effort would be made in this area. tire issue remains politically "hot" and is expected to be a prime campaign item.
